The two men quarrelled to-day at a place known as "The Camp." just south of the Long Island Railroad station at Roslyn. They came to blows and the megro, drawing a long-bladed knife, slashed Rooney, almost disembowelling him. Gillis then ran to the railroad station, pursued by two men.

A train for Long Island City was just pulling out and the negro swung himself aboard. His pursuers were unable to follow him and hurriedly reported the affair to the police.
